History of Soviet Aviation

Mezhdunarodnaya Kniga, the Soviet international book-selling organization, announced in its periodical Sovetskyye knigi, No 12, 1955, the publication of a new outline of the history of aviation in the USSR, from the time of A. F. MOZHAYSKIY to the present.

The new book, entitled Ocherki po istorii aviatsii nashey Rodiny (Outline of the History of Aviation of Our Motherland), was written by two top Soviet military authors, Col B. L. SIMAKOV*, editor of Kryl'ya Rodiny, one of the monthly Dosaaf publications, and Col I. F. SHIPILOV*, deputy editor of Vestnik Vozdushnogo Flota, the monthly periodical of the Air Forces of the Soviet Army.

Although it is somewhat early to expect results from the recent press and public-utterances campaign against certain Soviet military histories -- against their inaccuracy, lack of objectivity, etc. -- this possibly could be the forerunner of the anticipated flow of rewritten histories of the Soviet Armed Forces.

present.. KUZNETSOV criticized those commanders who concern themselves only with training "perfect" officers, those who make no mistakes, and who consider an officer's service worthless after he has made a mistake and been punished.

KUZNETSOV cited Lt Col Tech Serv G. GUSEV* as an example of an officer who made a mistake in his work, was demoted one rank, and was helped to re-attain his rank by fellow officers, the commander, and members of the party organization. Officer MARCHENKO broke flight regulations and was reduced one rank. However, he realized his mistakes, made an effort to correct them, and was restored to his former rank by the Minister of Defense USSR.

KUZNETSOV gave other examples of officers who were aided, and stressed the fact that helping an officer to reform does not mean that commanders should lessen their demands or allow discipline to decrease. (Moscow, Krasnaya Zvezda, 25 Jun 55)

Author of article, "Creatively Master the Science of Flying," concerning the importance of theoretical knowledge in mastering the flying of contemporary aircraft under contemporary battle conditions. SAVITSKIY discussed the role of the "pair," two planes flying as one, neither of which has more importance in aerial combat. SAVITSKIY stated that relatively unknown works by Yevgraf KRUTEN', Tip apparata istrebitelya (A Type of Fighter Aircraft) and Vozdushnyy boy (Aerial Battle), brought out the fact that fighter planes should work in pairs, but that few Soviet fliers of World War II had any idea of the contents of these works, only stumbling upon the same conclusions. SAVITSKIY also cited a work on aerial tactics by A. N. LAPCHINSKIY, which he said is also unfamiliar to Soviet pilots.

SAVITSKIY called for wider use of such theoretical works in the training of pilots, and gave examples of training in various air force units. (Moscow, Krasnaya Zvezda, 28 Jun 55)
